We wish that Peking should be invited into the U.N.—but on the U.N.'s terms.

BY JOHN J. MCCORMACK

Peking's long refusal to join the United Nations is a source of continuing frustration and disappointment to many in the West. It is a frustration that is not shared by all, however. In the United States, for example, there are those who believe that the United Nations is a body that has become so paralyzed and so ineffective that it is no longer worth the effort to keep it alive. They believe that the United States should withdraw from the organization and that the world should be governed by a coalition of the great powers. Others believe that the United Nations is a body that has become so corrupted and so self-serving that it is no longer worth the effort to keep it alive. They believe that the United States should withdraw from the organization and that the world should be governed by a coalition of the great powers. The King, in a letter to the Greek people, has expressed his deep sympathy for the Greek people and their struggle for freedom and democracy. He has also expressed his confidence that the Greek people will eventually overcome their difficulties and build a free and prosperous nation. The King's letter is a clear and unequivocal statement of his support for the Greek people and their struggle for freedom and democracy. It is a statement that is sure to inspire the Greek people and give them the confidence they need to continue their struggle.
