My dear Kalliope,

I just learned about the death of Salon. You have my deepest sympathy. I am so very sorry. I know that very soon, the memories of the good life you had together will replace the grief that you are now feeling. I am so sad of your loss.

Kalliope, please take care of yourself. Please write to me when you feel up to it.

With lots of love
Sophia

Dear Madame Michaelides -

WE were very sad to get your letter of November 23 with its news of Solon's death. I realized when I saw him some months ago that he was suffering, but I hoped for a recovery that might have enabled him to carry on his great work, even if on a less demanding basis. He will be much missed, not only by those who knew him personally and enjoyed the privilege of his friendship, but also by scholars all over the world who have profited from his music, his researches, and his recent fine publication.

My wife and I send you our most sincere condolences. WE have very affectionate memories of Solon and yourself as well as a profound admiration for Solon's varied and distinguished achievements. WE hope that you yourself are keeping as well as may be, in such a sad time, and WE recall with respect the unflinching care that you bestowed on your husband, which must have done so much to help his work and at the end to lessen his sufferings. WE send you, with our love, our very best wishes for the future.

Yours sincerely

Thomas Armstrong.

Dear Mme. Michaelides,

I want to join with my husband in sending you my most sincere sympathy in your grievous loss. We shall miss you both very much indeed at Langollen, and it will not seem the same at all without you there.

My husband had a very high opinion of Dr. Michaelides and will particularly miss his support on the panel of the Adjudicators, and I have always admired his kind and understanding judgements, and, specially, his great courage when he was feeling unwell. We shall neither of us ever forget him.

If you come to visit England again I hope you will let us know and that we can arrange to meet? We should

So much like to keep in touch with you.

With kindest regards and affection and again all my sympathy.

Yours very sincerely,

Hester Armstrong.
